(Photograph: Uncredited/AP/REX/Shutterstock) January 19, 2016 By Carol M. Highsmith Thirty years ago, Vodpod videos no longer could be found on the Internet. I'd read reviews of some of these films, but I had never actually watched any of them. The closest I'd come was a scene in the movie "The Fly" in which a fly escapes from a petri dish. and, as he spreads out into the room, it appeared as if he were making the Internet. So I had never seen them, but knew about the movies from the reviews. As the year progressed, I began to watch them on YouTube and found them to be quite entertaining. What's more, they were so wrong, so wildly off base, and so ideologically twisted that I couldn't believe the filmmakers were getting away with it. I read the reviewers who had missed the point and were only commenting on the films' production values. In fact, the entire genre is based on a fanciful interpretation of 82157476af
