to work - today For those of you wondering about Amanda's absence, I can now say that I received notice yesterday of my discharge from the Epworth Ambulance service. The final costs are $6,355 plus $1,288 of Medicare payments, or $7,543. That includes the eftpos payment for my first week and the $6,355 out of pocket. In the US, ambulance transport is provided by a system of private companies. However, the service is very similar in operation to the United Kingdom's private Ambulance services. Thankfully, the service had done all the correct paperwork for me, and I have been able to get medical assistance up and down the East Coast. The paperwork process can be very overwhelming at times for the patient. As the reports and documents flow in, an enormous pile of paperwork will build up - between insurance companies, hospitals, surgeons, etc. If I had not received a form letter (which I only received after the payment was made) in my mailbox, I would have thought that I was just a few weeks away from the finish line. On a personal note, I have been fine. The wound is healing well, with new granulation at the base of it (the actual wound). There are two large holes in the left side of the glove, but I didn't notice those until several days after the surgery. I have not had any infections, nor any complications with the wound. That being said, the scar will be an unusual
